Title: Social impact and civic engagement of universities: qualitative and quantitative methodologies for assessment

Offer description:

The research project aims to analyze the methods of evaluating and measuring the social engagement of universities and their civic impact. The role of scientific research within a multilevel governance is considered and its contribution to reducing economic, social and technological disparities, improving community engagement, strengthening social inclusion and promoting participatory governance, in dialogue with the other actors of the Quadruple Helix model (government institutions, civil society and industry). On the qualitative level, the techniques of participatory research, scenario foresight, stakeholder engagement are considered, in particular. On the quantitative front, analysis models are examined, also based on econometric techniques and the exploitation of artificial intelligence support, for monitoring impact. The activities are aimed at supporting an existing research team for the production of a high-impact international publication.
